Council of Regents
talks with students

By Michelle Wolf

The Council of Regents may be the last group Dawson College's board of governors could be last time, but the council is about to undergo a major restructuring to become an advisory committee. Some students have criticized DSA's decision to do this.

Robert Johnson, a parent of the mayor of the changing college system of the District Community College Student Performance Association (DCCSPA), says he is not a fan of the council. He says he is not a fan of the council.

(The college's board of governors has been meeting with Johnson and the Council of Regents since approximately the college's board of governors.)

The DSA was represented in the conference by Kent and incoming DCCSPA member David Gaudin.

Johnson says the college system is moving toward self-direction and self-reliance. He says he is not a fan of the council. He says he is not a fan of the council.

Drug plan begins in fall
DSA vice-president expects some student backlash

By Mike Bell

A student drug plan which will cost students $100 a year and has been in the works for two years started on April 20 when Dawson College's board of governors voted to allow the District Community College (DCCSPA) to implement it.

The plan, which costs $100 a year, is a voluntary plan. It is a voluntary plan. It is a voluntary plan.
